SF Ballet’s adaptation of ‘Raymonda’ will be a rarity

Tamara Rojo choreographs for company for first time by revisiting lesser-known classic

By James Ambroff-Tahan
Special to The Examiner

For San Francisco Ballet Artistic Director Tamara Rojo, choosing a frequently performed warhorse such as “Swan Lake” as the first work she would choreograph for the company was never in the cards.

Instead, Rojo chose Marius Petipa’s rarely performed “Raymonda” to reimagine while she was the artistic director of the English National Ballet. Her version — which resets the work from the time of the Crusades to the Crimean War in the 19th century and redefines the role of women in wartime and society — will be the first opus she has choreographed to be presented by San Francisco Ballet when it opens March 1.

“I was looking to revisit a classic that wasn’t constantly being performed, something unusual — I didn’t want to do yet another ‘Swan Lake’ or ‘Sleeping Beauty’ — and ‘Raymonda’ is a ballet that, according to Tchaikovsky, has the best score (by Alexander Glazunov) ever written for ballet,” Rojo said.

“It’s rarely been performed outside of Russia because the theme is complex and at times offensive, and so I felt it was worth trying to preserve what was good about the ballet — the music and choreography — but put it in a different historical context in the manner that theatrical canon does all the time to see if the piece had enough value to sustain that,” she said.

Rojo’s “Raymonda” premiered in London in 2022, but Petipa’s original ballet debuted at the Imperial Mariinsky Theatre in St. Petersburg, Russia, in 1898. That production’s portrayal of the relationship between Christians and Muslims in the 12th century was among the issues in the story that Rojo found problematic. Another was the passive characterization of the ballet’s lead, Countess Raymonda, as a woman waiting for her beloved fiancé and noble knight, Jean de Brienne — a man she hasn’t even met — to return from war.

“It felt like a very non-story,” Rojo said.

“We watch this woman perform for over three hours but know nothing about her, what motivates her, her interests or her feelings toward the man she’s supposed to love or the man she’s not supposed to love.”

In Rojo’s adaptation of “Raymonda,” which the San Francisco company will unveil during Women’s History Month, the female lead is a more resolute character full of feelings who is evocative of the social activist and founder of modern nursing, Florence Nightingale.

Through her narrative of “Raymonda,” Rojo said she wanted to highlight how her heroine faced societal pressures and the expectations of her family and friends to marry and live the life of an upper-class British woman, but instead followed her own aspirations to have a profession that at the time wasn’t even considered dignified until she made it so.

“I tried to put forward throughout the ballet both aspects of Florence Nightingale and the constant contradiction I think
